10:00 Andrew Lansley

Secretary of State for Health

How the modernisation plans will encourage innovation to drive up quality and value for money

With rising costs and a tighter budget, the NHS must innovate to survive. The government's modernisation plans will encourage innovation to drive up quality and value for money.

11:00 Sir David Nicholson

NHS Chief Executive, Department of Health

The new NHS commissioning system: the driver of innovation

David Nicholson sets out how the new commissioning system will be the driver for innovation in an NHS firmly focused on quality outcomes.

14:00 Ben Page

Chief Executive, Ipsos MORI

Research led innovation

Ben will examine public perceptions of the NHS as a huge reform programme gets underway, look at what patients expect, and asks what the most successful trusts will need to change for success in this new environment.

15:00 Geoff Mulgan

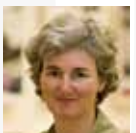

Chief Executive, Young Foundation and CEO Designate, NESTA

Encouraging innovation

Geoff will focus on the practical challenge of developing radically more effective models for such tasks as supporting discharged elderly patients to stay in their homes, supporting self-management for people with diabetes or cutting obesity. How can the NHS generate ideas, test and evaluate potential solutions, finance them and take them to scale – and what do we know about which methods work best?

16:00 The idea most likely to make the biggest impact on healthcare by 2020

Panel session hosted by Dr Fiona Godlee, Editor in Chief, BMJ

A single idea has the potential to change healthcare forever. The functional MRI scanner, the sequencing of the human genome and the smoking ban have revolutionised health over the last decade. We ask you to join us as we predict what comes next. The BMJ has invited four innovation champions to battle it out in front of an expert panel to help you decide which idea is most likely to make the biggest impact on healthcare by 2020.

Guest panel:

Professor Sir Bruce Keogh

10:00

Lord Howe

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Department of Health

The NHS – a driver for economic growth

The genius of UK scientists and inventors has helped to define 20th century medicine and healthcare. In a new century, how do we build on this rich pedigree, and make this talent for innovation a more powerful driver for economic growth?

11:00

Lord Victor Adebawale

Chief Executive, Turning Point

An innovative approach to the third sector

Victor will speak on the difficulties of working in partnership while innovating illustrated by Turning Point's Connected Care Service. He will also touch on the challenge of private sector innovation, drawing on his connections with St Vincent's Healthcare.

14:00

Jim Easton

National Director for Improvement and Efficiency, Department of Health

A system driven by innovation

Jim will present his vision of how different the system could be, right now, if only we put in place the technological innovations we already know about at scale and how we need to change the system to achieve widespread adoption of innovation.

15:00

How private partners can help drive innovation across the NHS

Panel session chaired by Jim Easton, National Director for Improvement and Efficiency, Department of Health

The closing panel session is your chance to hear the views of a panel of senior business leaders together with Jim Easton, as they discuss how private partners can help drive innovation across the NHS.

Following speeches by Ministers and senior policy makers, this session underlines the important part the private sector has to play in helping the NHS achieve its objectives of improving the quality of patient care and productivity. It will look at how the partnership with the NHS can be improved and deliver more in the future.
